Kilday Group Studies Regular Rank Bill; Sec'y Wilson Calls Present Limit 'Unrealistic'

The Army and Air Force must act quickly to build up their Regular officer strength, Pentagon manpower chief Carter L. Burgess told the Kilday House Armed Services Subcommittee this week.

An impressive array of top Defense officials accompanied Mr. Burgess to the opening hearings on the Regular Officer Augmentation bill to give the measure solid support.

The Assistant Secretary for Manpower Personnel and Reserve read a statement from Defense Secretary Charles E. Wilson in which the Pentagon leader said the U. S. now has the biggest peacetime force in its history and needs a stabilized corps of officers to give it "the guidance, the professional competence, the continuity and the immediate combat readiness it must have."

Mr. Wilson said the Army and Air Force particularly "are handicapped by strength ceilings that are completely unrealistic in relation to their total officer requirements."

Both the Navy and the Marine Corps have adequate statutory authority for regular officers, Secretary Wilson said, and their regular officer strengths are

"much closer to foreseeable needs than are those of the other services."

The proposed legislation makes permanent the Navy and Marine Corps temporary authority to integrate Reserve—Continued on page 5

Bold New Pay Plan Will Get Study; Would Break Further With Pay For Rank

Pay Committee TermsPage 2

A revolutionary military pay raise plan which could result in different pay for persons with identical rank and service will be surveyed at the Pentagon starting 1 June.

This inquiry, which will be conducted under Chairmanship of President Ralph J. Cordiner of the General Electric Company, will lead to introduction of military pay legislation early in the next session of Congress.

An indication of the slant that will be taken by the Defense Advisory Committee on Professional and Technical Compensation at the start of its work was given this week in Capitol testimony by Assistant Defense Secretary Carter L. Burgess.

Outlining progress in "career attractiveness" and spelling out the need for enactment of pending legislation, as reported in detail in other stories in this issue, Assistant Secretary Burgess declared:

"We believe we are at the point on the ladder of success where we need to refine our procedures more precisely to the point that we attract to and keep in the Services, for careers of proper duration, the proportion of personnel with special military skills—leaders and technicians, officers and enlisted—that we really need."

Mr. Burgess noted that Congress recently enacted special incentive pay legislation for military physicians and dentists and added that "the need for this kind of incentive compensation has long been recognized in the hazardous duty areas of aviation, submarine and parachute duty."

Then, apparently tipping off the current Defense Department thinking on how to implement a new pay raise, Mr. Burgess stated that "the rest of the military machine grinds along with no dis-

Must Make Military "Wanted Career," Asst. SecDef Burgess Tells Senate

ASSISTANT Defense Secretary Carter L. Burgess, with the complete backing of Defense Secretary Charles E. Wilson, has laid before Congress an urgent military personnel program designed to eliminate the threat that "our hardware will outdistance the ability of our people to employ it."

Testifying before a Senate Appropriations Subcommittee less than 24 hours after the Soviet announcement of plans to cut military manpower, Mr. Burgess declared that "we plan to maintain a force of approximately 2,850,000 for the indefinite future." He stressed that although reenlistment rates have gone up during the past year, the Services still are not getting and keeping enough top-notch officers and noncommissioned officers with needed skills.

The Pentagon manpower chief, in a 28-page statement, told the Senators what action is necessary to check the loss of skilled manpower. He mentioned, of course, the pay raise inquiry, described in an adjacent story. Assistant Secretary Burgess urged passage also of legislation to improve Family medical care, increase the Regular officer strength, reduce rentals for substandard quarters, provide Academy/ROTC longevity credit, remove inequities in survivor benefits and safeguard highest rank retirement—all discussed in detail in articles on Page 3 of this issue.

Concluded Mr. Burgess: "If our Armed Forces are to be manned with competent people, dedicated to the security of their country, we must make Military Life a Wanted Career."

Terms Of Reference Are Prescribed For New Pentagon Pay Inquiry

THE following are the Terms of Reference that have been given to the Defense Advisory Committee on Professional and Technical Compensation by the Office of the Secretary of Defense.

The Commission on Organization of the Executive Branch of the Government has pointed out that compensation for military and civilian personnel in the upper grades is inadequate to attract and retain the competent management required by our defense activities. Present remuneration is not commensurate with the grave responsibilities such officials must assume and places the Department of Defense at a competitive disadvantage with private industry.

The Career Incentive Act of 1955 did much to improve the situation for military personnel in intermediate grades. However, recommendations for increases in officer grades O-7 and O-8 were appreciably reduced.

The pending Executive Pay Bill, to be considered by this Congress, will have a definite bearing on what increases should be extended civilian scientific and professional personnel and personnel in grades GS-12 or higher.

Consideration must be given to the existing system for recompensing officer and enlisted technicians. The present practice of rewarding technical ability with rank in order to provide adequate pay, depreciates military authority and responsibility. Our most recent efforts to improve the compensation of those in the medical profession are indicative of a piecemeal approach to the problem, dictated by demand and without orientation to our over-all manpower requirements. If feasible, a more suitable solution is desirable and indicated. The problem is a complicated one, as some balance must be maintained between technicians and combat personnel.

I have appointed this committee to advise me in the above matters. I request you consider the present compensation authorized both civilian and military managers and submit recommendations as to what adjustments are required in the upper grades. As a collateral problem, you will also study a proper method of recompensing technical ability without depreciation of the authority and responsibility inseparable from command. Your recommendations should include necessary implementing legislative proposals.

Staff support will be provided by the Office of the Assistant Secretary of Defense (Manpower, Personnel and Reserve).

Liaison will be maintained with the Chairman, Civil Service Commission.

The committee will complete its deliberations and submit recommended legislative proposals prior to the first session of the 85th Congress.

crimination between men of the same grade and length of service for different levels of special military qualification. All receive the same.

"This leads men in the hazardous and non-hazardous fields to seek out the less arduous and less demanding assignments because the compensations are the same. That is why we are 25 per cent short in the combat arms MOS of the top three pay grades in the Continental Army and 25 per cent over in administrative specialists. Similar examples of imbalances could be found in the other Services."

It will be the job of Mr. Cordiner's Committee to recommend legislation "that may be necessary to strengthen and stabilize the status of career personnel with special military qualifications."

Senate Group OKs Waiting Pay For 5200

More than $2.3 million in "waiting pay" for 5,200 Army and Air Force officers was approved this week by the Senate Judiciary Committee.

The legislation was passed by the House a year ago this month. It is expected to be speedily approved by the Senate.

The bill (HR 5652) validates payments already made in the amount of $1,400,000 in the Army, and $600,000 in the Air Force, and would permit payment of an estimated $385,000 still due some officers. Approximately 4,000 of the officers are in the Army and 1200 in the Air Force.

The payments involved are those made since 31 Aug 1946 to commissioned officers of the Regular Army and of the Regular Air Force for pay and allowances for the time from their appointment until their assignment to their initial duty stations.

Waiting periods averaged about one month for the Army and 40 days for the Air Force and payments averaged about $344 and $480 per individual for the respective Services.

The Committee said it believes "there was never any legislative intent to withhold payment from officers for the period, after the execution of their oaths of office, while they were awaiting orders assigning them to their initial-duty stations."

No similar problem is expected to arise in the future. The Army and Air Force have changed their administrative procedures so that there is no longer a waiting period between the time of appointment of an officer and the time of his assignment to his initial duty station.

New Pentagon Bill Seeks Better Deal For Nurses-Specialists; Sec'y. Brucker Says "Essential" To Meet Regular Requirements

PRESIDENT Eisenhower's promise—made in his January State of the Union Message—for legislation to improve career opportunities for military nurses was fulfilled this week with Pentagon sponsorship of a $785,660 bill.

Speaking for all the Services, Army Secretary Wilber M. Brucker told Congress that the legislation is essential if the Army, Navy and Air Force are to obtain adequate numbers of Regular nurses and medical specialists.

In general, the bill would increase from captain to major in the Army and Air Force, and from lieutenant to lieutenant commander in the Navy the permanent grade which the average nurse or medical specialist could attain in a full career.

THE JOURNAL, in an article published on 4 Feb. called attention to the discrimination against nurses in current promotion laws. This article noted that hundreds of nurses are denied promotion opportunities available to other officers, both male and female.

The Pentagon's response to the inequities in Nurse Corps promotions is detailed in the following statement to the Speaker of the House and President of the Senate from Secretary Brucker.

Because this bill will affect every nurse and medical specialist in the Armed Services, pertinent explanatory material in Mr. Brucker's communication is published herewith:

The purpose of the proposed legislation is to provide increased career opportunities for Regular service for nurses and medical specialists of the Army, Navy and Air Force. It would achieve this primarily by increasing from captain to major in the Army and Air Force and from lieutenant to lieutenant commander in the Navy the permanent grade which the average nurse or medical specialist could expect to attain during the course of a full military career. It would also, for the Army and Navy, increase the number of officers presently authorized to serve as lieutenant colonels (commanders) and establish the permanent grade of colonel (captain) for officers in these categories. Existing law, Air Force Organization Act of 1951, already provides authority for these grades in the Air Force. This would recognize, by appropriate grade, the responsibilities commensurate with certain positions which these officers occupy. Additionally, the proposed legislation would retire nurses and medical specialists of the Army and

Air Force under procedures which are applicable generally to other Regular officers of those services.

For the Army and Air Force Title I, Army-Navy Nurses Act of 1947, as amended, which now generally governs the appointment, promotion and retirement of these officers, would be repealed (except for section 110 and for section 109 as it pertains to the Air Force) insofar as it affects Regular nurses and medical specialists of both services. Certain provisions of the existing law, however, would be restated and incorporated into the new law without any substantive change. Among the major changes which the proposed legislation would make are the following:

a. It establishes the permanent grade of colonel in the Army Nurse Corps, Regular Army, and the permanent grades of colonel and lieutenant colonel in the Army Medical Specialist Corps, Regular Army. It also sets the number of officers who may be in those permanent grades at 5 colonels and 107 lieutenant colonels in the Army Nurse Corps, Regular Army, and at one colonel and 20 lieutenant colonels in the Army Medical Specialist Corps, Regular Army. Existing law authorizes only 33 permanent lieutenant colonels and 75 permanent majors in the Army Nurse Corps, Regular Army, and only 35 permanent majors in

Highest Retirement Asked By Pentagon

Defense Department officials are anxious for quick Congressional passage of legislation which would assure all military personnel the right to retire in the highest grade satisfactorily held.

The Navy and Marine Corps have such authority, but temporary authority for Army and Air Force officers to retire in highest rank expires 31 December 1956.

"Most officers in the Air Force and many in the Army serve in temporary grades, many times two grades higher than their permanent grades," Assistant Secretary Burgess advised the Senate Appropriations Committee. "It is unreasonable to expect them to understand and accept this inequity."

Pentagon officials have said that failure of Congress to enact legislation extending authority for top-rank retirements could prompt considerable numbers of officers to apply for premature retirement. The alternative, as pointed out by Mr. Burgess, would be that "many of our best officers must look forward to years of additional service before retiring in a grade lower than that in which they have satisfactorily performed their duty. This does little to persuade such individuals that they are pursuing a wanted career and is not in consonance with our large scale level force."

CAPITOL STATUS: This legislation was cleared by the House last month and was due for Senate Armed Services Committee consideration late this week.

WW II Logistics Volume

The Army's fourth volume on the history of WW II, "The War Department: Global Logistics and Strategy, 1940-1943," was published 11 May.

The new volume, written by Richard M. Leighton and Robert W. Coakley, describes the task of effecting the orderly assembly, movement and delivery of great masses of men and materiel throughout the world to meet U. S. requirements and the needs of our allies.

The policy, method and organization which provided the Army's logistical support, including the war-time activities of the Army Service Force, are among the subjects discussed. In addition, there is a comprehensive account of American military lend-lease operations, including the air program to Russia.

Can't Measure Value Of Medical Care

The impact of the Family Medical Care Bill on the drive to raise the attractiveness of military services was stressed by Assistant Defense Secretary Burgess in his Senate statement this week.

He said: "The worth of this bill in giving peace of mind to the Serviceman that, regardless of where he is, his dependents will have adequate medical protection cannot be priced out in terms of dollars or cents or predicted in terms of specific increases in the reenlistment rate..."

"We feel certain that it will reduce one of the major deterrents to continued service for some of our personnel. It is a step in the right direction of unknown magnitude."

Mr. Burgess observed that the 40 per cent of military families who cannot now be treated in military facilities will get treatment under terms of the bill.

Denial Of Academy/ROTC Pay Credit Labelled "Unintentional Affront" On Hill

Discrimination against graduates of Service Academies and ROTC programs in the matter of longevity pay has been called an "unintentional affront which we just cannot explain."

This was the remark made by Assistant Defense Secretary Burgess in testimony on the fiscal '57 budget. He called for passage of legislation to give Academy and ROTC graduates pay credit similar to that awarded men who come into the Service from some 10 other methods of training which lead to a commission.

Mr. Burgess noted that the present situation means that whereas the monthly base pay of an Academy or ROTC graduate on commissioning is $220 per month, a person commissioned via another source might earn as much as $296.

"It is virtually impossible to explain this inequity to the individuals involved," said Mr. Burgess. "Surely it is not the intention nor the attitude of the Congress that these groups of officers should continue in a secondary status within the Armed Forces."

CAPITOL STATUS: A bill (H.R. 10212), sponsored by Representative Cole (R-N.Y.) and endorsed by the Administration would give the Academy/ROTC longevity pay credit to officers who complete four years active service. It would mean about $29 million per year in added pay. No hearings have yet been scheduled, however, and chances for action this year are seen as less than 50-50, although the Assistant Secretary's testimony this week could change that outlook.)

RE-UP LAW HEADED FOR NEW LOOK

Assistant Defense Secretary Burgess, declaring that "it is time we break with such tradition," has foretold a Pentagon proposal to revamp present reenlistment bonus pay policies which treat all Servicemen alike.

Mr. Burgess said in his statement to the Senate Appropriations Subcommittee that re-up pay needs to be adjusted to "Supply and Demand." He said that "right now we pay the same reenlistment compensation to all men of the same grade and length of service regardless of the in-service demand for these individuals and regardless of industry's demands for them."

The alternative? Mr. Burgess visualized a system with flexibility which pays a higher re-up compensation "to the individuals who are in short supply and a lower amount to individuals in over supply."

"This would be an incentive system at work within the Services, which by the law of supply and demand, would compensate for overages and shortages in personnel with special military qualifications by motivating individuals with the needed talents to enter the shortage fields."

The Assistant Secretary indicated that Servicemen who do not have the capacity to be retrained for a skill in which a demand exists perhaps "should no longer be permitted to remain in the Service. This would break with the traditional view that a man who has merely kept out of trouble has a place in the military service for as long as he elects to stay. It is time we break with such tradition. We have no place for the half-lazy, the half-talented in today's complex military structure."

CAPITOL STATUS: No such specific legislation has yet been introduced, but it appears likely that the Defense Department will advocate major revisions in current re-up bonus payments, probably during the next session of Congress. This may be included in the forthcoming pay raise legislation to facilitate legislative handling.

Senate OKs Family Medicare; Conference Slated; Final Approval Seen This Month

The multi-million dollar Family Medical Care Bill—affecting more than 840,000 military dependents—is expected to become law late this month.

The measure won Senate approval on 14 May and was headed for conference, to reconcile Senate and House differences, as THE JOURNAL went to press.

The measure won overwhelming approval of both Houses but the Senate wiped out some potential benefits for the families of retired and deceased personnel, and erased all medical care for parents and parents-in-law.

It is expected that the House will strive to have these provisions put back into the measure.

As approved by the Senate, the bill will cost between $50 and $55 million during the first year. It provides uniform medical care for dependents in military hospitals and establishes a medical insurance program which permits civilian hospitalization of military dependents when Service facilities are not available. The dependent would pay the first $25 of the civilian hospital charges or the prevailing daily subsistence charge in military hospitals (currently $1.75) for the number of days hospitalized, whichever is greater.

The House Bill would cost up to $76 million. It also provides uniform medical care for dependents in military hospitals, including parents and parents-in-law, and establishes a medical insurance program which permits civilian hospitalization when service facilities are unavailable. Under the House plan, the full cost to the military dependent hospitalized in a civilian facility would be $25. In addition, the Defense Secretary is given permissive authority under the House plan to "buy" a similar medical care insurance program for families of retired and deceased personnel, provided such care can be purchased within the $76 million plan.

Chairman Richard B. Russell (D-Ga.) of the Senate Armed Services Committee said his group "deleted this permissive authority in the thought that a new program such as this should be started on a limited basis." He said "If it proves workable and reasonable in cost as applied to the spouses and children of active-duty personnel, consideration may be given at a later date to an extension of the program."

Senator Leverett Saltonstall (R-Mass.), ranking Republican on the Committee, told the Senate the Medicare measure "will make a definite contribution toward stimulating both enlistments and recruitments in our armed services, and toward reducing the number of resignations from the services, which have in past months given us much concern."

He said the measure "is one of several proposals which, taken together, are designed to make a military career more attractive generally. Already enacted are measures for increased pay, greater re-enlistment allowances, more housing for dependents, and a career incentive measure for medical and dental officers."

It is expected that the bill will go to the White House next week if the conferees reach speedy agreement on the final form of the measure.

INFLATED RENTALS "HARD TO BELIEVE"

Hopes for enactment of legislation to provide reduced rentals for thousands of Service families forced to occupy substandard quarters have brightened as a result of a statement made to the Senate Appropriations Subcommittee by Assistant Defense Secretary Burgess.

He called new attention to the fact that large numbers of military families are required to forfeit their total quarters allowance for shoddy quarters.

CAPITOL STATUS: A House Armed Services Subcommittee late this week was due to wind up its work on legislation which would provide benefits for more than 30,000 families.

Col. Greene to Carib

Col. A. A. Greene, USA, executive officer of Fourth Army headquarters Inspector General section at Ft. Sam Houston, Tex. has left for assignment with the U. S. Army Caribbean.

Colonel Greene and his wife, Katherine, have two children, Lee F., 18, and Nancy, 8. He and Mrs. Greene and Nancy traveled to Brooklyn, where the colonel embarked 14 May. Mrs. Greene and Nancy will visit at the home of her father, General C. L. Fenton, USA (Ret.), near Cornwall-on-the-Hudson until Lee has finished his school term at Washington, Conn., in June. They will then join Colonel Greene in Panama, where he has been assigned as commandant of the Army's Caribbean School.

REGULAR'S WIDOW SUFFERS "VAST" INEQUITY

Assistant Secretary Burgess has called to the attention of Senators "vastly different" benefits that now are paid to survivors of military personnel who die or are killed while in active Service. He urged passage of pending legislation, which would correct this situation.

Illustrating the inequities which now exist, Mr. Burgess noted the example of two captains—one a Reservist and the other a Regular—who are killed in the same aircraft crash. The Reservist's family, with entitlements under the Federal Employees Compensation Act, would receive about twice as much as the Regular's survivors while the children are of minor age.

After the children become of age, the Reservist's widow would receive almost four times as much.

Mr. Burgess said this situation shouts the question: "Why be a Regular?"

CAPITOL STATUS: The House last year passed a comprehensive Survivor Benefits measure, which eliminates such discrepancies as cited above, raised survivor payments for scores of thousands and places all military personnel under Social Security coverage, based on pay of rank instead of the present temporary automatic $160 per month wage credit. The Senate Finance Committee, however, has yet to hold hearings on the bill.

Army Asks 3500 Quarters For Benning And Bragg; Blasts "Disgraceful" Housing

Army leaders lashed out this week at real estate interests which are trying to "stymie" the Army's program to build "decent" homes for its families.

Under Secretary of the Army Charles C. Finucane told the House Armed Services Committee "we in the Army consider it a national disgrace to subject our personnel to living conditions certainly not in keeping with the dignity of 20th Century modern living in our country."

He said at least 1,500 family housing units are badly needed at Fort Bragg, N. C., and another 1,000 at Fort Benning, Ga., where conditions "are among the most acute within the Army establishment."

However, he said, in each community "certain private interests have done their best to stymie the Army program or to forestall it if possible and to deny to our service families their urgent immediate requirement for decent homes."

Maj. Gen. Joseph H. Harper, USA, former Commanding General at Fort Benning, said he has urged Army Secretary Wilber M. Brucker to move the 3d Infantry Division away from Benning unless family housing there can be improved.

Mr. Finucane said he had never seen Secretary Brucker more "exercised about this problem of inadequate family quarters."

He told the Committee that the Army considers family housing its "most important program." He said there is a deficit of some 75,000 units at Army installations throughout the U. S. which "means that 75,000 Army families either are separated, live too far from their stations, pay an exorbitant rent, live in substandard quarters, or even a combination of these."

The Army plans to build 4,000 units with appropriated funds, he said, and another 22,897 units under the Capehart program. These housing units "are required now," he said.

He cited Fort Bragg as an example of "only one of our installations which is in need of a vast number of family housing units. At this post we have a deficit of family quarters in excess of 2,200 units." More than 1,500 units of existing family quarters at Bragg "fall into the substandard category," he said, and "must be withdrawn from use as family quarters as quickly as possible after completion of the new Capehart homes."

Secretary Finucane said "The same conditions exist at Fort Benning. There we must have an additional 1,000 units and we must have them now."

Numerous pictures of the substandard houses at Benning were shown to the Committee. Members expressed disbelief that anyone would want Service families to live in "such shacks."

Army Opens 872-Bed Hotel At Rhein-Main

Concerts by two bands, speeches by German and American dignitaries, and guided tours highlighted the opening ceremonies of the U.S. Army Northern Area Command-built Air Passenger Center near Rhein-Main Air base on 16 May.

The German and American public were invited to the opening of the 5,334,000 DM U.S. Army hotel located near the autobahn. It is the largest hotel built in Germany since World War II and is the only edifice of its type in the world.

The 872-bed hotel will enable the U.S. Armed Forces to process up to 30,000 people a month arriving and departing from Europe and makes possible the de-requisition of hotel property in downtown Frankfurt.

The Air Passenger Center was constructed by the German firm of Mueller-Altvetter of Stuttgart and designed by Architect Otto Apel. Construction was supervised by the Frankfurt Subarea Engineer Section under the aegis of the Northern Area Command Engineer Division.

The structure is four stories high and is "H" shaped with 326 rooms. It is located only six and one-fourth miles from the Frankfurt Bahnhof and 1,640 feet from the airstrip.

ists into their Regular ranks.

Both the Army and Air Force will give many thousands of officers a chance at Regular commissions under the terms of the legislation.

Only 17 per cent of all active duty Air Force officers are Regulars at present and the Army "is only slightly better off with a ratio of about 26 per cent Regulars," Mr. Wilson said.

With approval of the augmentation program, the Army and Air Force will build their Regular officer corps to 36 per cent within the next two years.

This feature of the program prompted the Committee Counsel, Lt. Col. John R. Blandford, USMCR, to ask if the Army and Air Force "may be trying to move too fast." He noted that the Air Force will double its Regular strength during the first two years after the program goes into operation and he suggested that the Services, in their zeal, might "become less selective" under such rapid expansion.

Secretary Burgess answered that "time is not on our side." He said if the Defense Department allows the Services to continue under their present Regular-Reserve ratio they will "continue to lose officers" and, because the officers are not properly motivated, the Services also will lose many enlisted men.

Chairman Paul J. Kilday (D-Tex) said the subcommittee will want to go into the matter thoroughly "and explore all features of the proposed legislation." In particular, he said, emphasis will be given to:

1—The need for increasing the number of regular officers in the Armed Forces.

2—The necessity for including the Navy and Marine Corps in the proposed legislation. (With the concurrence of Secretary Burgess, the committee tentatively decided to extend present Navy and Marine Corps augmentation authority on a permanent basis, and confine its study to Army and Air Force augmentation problems).

3—The desirability of having general legislation for all Services rather than separate titles for each Service.

4—What effect integration will have upon Regular officers previously integrated.

5—What effect integration will have upon future retirement costs insofar as constructive credit is concerned. (Both the Army and Air Force plan to grant constructive credit to several thousand officers under their integration plans.)

6—What effect increased constructive credit will have upon extending the limitations contained in the Officer Grade Limitation Act. (The Services currently are limited in the number of officers they may have in the grades of major and above by the terms of the OGL Act.)

7—The desirability of preserving the

Polio Vaccine Report Shows Services Well Along With Salk Inoculations

The overseas polio vaccine program, for all practical purposes, has been completed by the Armed Forces.

Only a few overseas children up to 15 years old have not yet had their Salk vaccine shots. In this group are those who have recently arrived overseas, those who did not get a first and second shot in the States, and those who did not report in for their immunization.

In the States, the first round of shots essentially has been completed. The three Services are preparing to administer the second round.

In general, the Army, Navy and Air

Force are on par insofar as their continental U. S. programs are concerned. The Services meet regularly to coordinate the program and to see that all Service children are given an equal opportunity to receive their shots. In fact, the tri-Service Committee, presided over by the Defense Department, spends more time on the Salk program than any other medical program.

With few exceptions, all dependent children in the United States have received their first vaccination. In some areas, a second shot already has been given. Some areas are ahead of others to some degree because the Services follow the patterns set down by the individual States. For example, if medical experts feel that the available Salk vaccine would do more good in a potential epidemic area, the Armed Services work hand in glove with the State authorities, deferring the serum from a less critical locale to a more critical area.

As of 9 May, when the Defense Department was allocated 50,670 cc's of Salk vaccine, the Services had received nearly 1,000,000 cc's for their programs.

Each of the Services was apportioned its share on the basis of need, the Army getting 390,983 cc's, the Navy 254,573 cc's, and the Air Force 325,505 cc's.

Close-up shows a General Electric 5-Star subminiature tube structure being inserted in its bulb, or envelope—similar to those the inspector at left is examining. Flared ends of the bulbs guide the snug-fitting mica tube spacers into the envelope without damage to their contact points.

Flared ends of G-E 5-Star subminiature tube bulbs assure close fit of tube structure!

So essential is the tight, permanent fit of the subminiature tube structure in its glass envelope, that General Electric uses only special flared bulbs. With these the tube structure can be inserted in the bulb, or envelope, without damage to the mica spacer points.

These special flared bulbs—another 5-Star quality feature—result in a finished tube which provides improved resistance to sustained mechanical excitation and exhibits low vibration output. The flared end disappears when the tubes are sealed, leaving the bulbs straight-side.

Before manufacture, special 5-Star tube design has assured a high degree of sturdiness and dependability. Tube parts are extra-strong; bracing substantial and firm. After manufacture comes a series of rigid 5-Star tests that measure tube reliability under the severe conditions apt to be met in military service.

For maximum tube reliability, ask for G-E 5-Star subminiatures in new military equipment! Install them as replacements! Tube Department, General Electric Company, Schenectady 5, New York.

Advance Travel Pay Plan Gets Test, Authorizes Officer Payment Up To $360

The Navy Comptroller has approved a plan whereby officers who travel under repeated travel orders may draw an additional advance—up to $360—to defray their travel expenses. The plan is designed to eliminate the inconvenience of applying for frequent travel advances by providing a "working travel fund."

The Commanding officer of an officer issued repeated travel orders may authorize this working fund by endorsement to the original travel orders. The advance will be based on the average cost of a TAD trip. Replenishment of the initial advance will be made through the submission of the usual reimbursement claim when the directed travel is completed.

The advance will be entered on the officer's pay record but need not be liquidated until the repeated travel orders have expired, have been revoked or the officer is ordered to a permanent change of duty, whichever occurs first. The officer may then either return the specified amount or direct the disbursing officer to deduct it from his pay.

The use of this procedure will be optional and will be tried out in the Washington area on a trial basis only, beginning 1 July. If the plan proves successful, it may be extended to other parts of the naval establishment.

The "working travel fund" idea was originated by Lt (jg) James B. Ramey, SC, USN, Assistant Officer in Charge of Officers' Accounts, Disbursing Office, Washington, D. C.

General Pate Tells Marine Manpower Growth During Coming Fiscal Year

The Marine Corps will lose 150 officers and gain 4,885 enlisted men during the 12-month period beginning on 1 July.

General Randolph McC. Pate, USMC, Commandant of the Marine Corps, summarized Marine Corps manpower plans in an appearance before the Senate Appropriations Committee. He said the Marine Corps will begin the new fiscal year with a force of 201,000 which will grow to 205,735 by 30 June 1957.

Approximately 50.6 per cent (7,696 officers and 96,412 enlisted men) will be in the Fleet Marine Force. Another 8.9 per cent will serve in the security forces, ships detachments and an experimental combat unit. The remaining 40.5 per cent will comprise the training and support activities, and personnel who are transients, patients, prisoners, and so forth.

The Marine Corps Reserve also will grow during the period. General Pate said 791 officers and 33,395 enlisted men will be added to the Reserve force to boost it from 169,905 to 204,091. More than half (402) of the new officers and more than a fourth (9,050) of the enlisted men will be serving in a drill-pay status.

The 16,290 civilian employees of the Marine Corps will remain unchanged.

USMC Extends "Boot" Training Two Weeks, Will Be Longest In Armed Services

Marine "boots" will spend more time in basic training than recruits of any of the other Services as a result of a new order by Brig. Gen. Wallace M. Greene, USMC, who heads the Recruit Training at Parris Island, S. C.

Recruits entering the Marine Corps will be required to spend 12 weeks in basic instead of the 10-week period established in July 1953.

General Greene was named to the new post following the Parris Island tragedy in which six recruits lost their lives by drowning during an "unauthorized" night march.

Headquarters said that General Greene's decision is an outgrowth of the Parris Island incident.

In recommending extended basic training, General Greene reported to Headquarters that there was insufficient training time to accomplish all that the Headquarters syllabus demanded.

In addition, the General said that the move was considered advisable since it would "ease the pressure on both the trainees and the drill instructors," Headquarters reports.

It is expected that a similar program soon will be announced by officials at the San Diego, Calif., Training Base.

In the Army, the basic training period lasts eight weeks, followed by eight weeks of advanced individual training in MOS categories. This system has been in effect at least since WWII.

The Navy's "boot" training period lasts nine weeks. The training period was cut back from 12 weeks in October 1954.

Basic airmen normally remain in preliminary training for 11 weeks. Under the Air Force system, however, if an individual shows a marked aptitude for technical work, he spends only four weeks in basic and is then shifted to a technical training school. While at the technical school, he receives basic and specialized training simultaneously.

Ultimately, the Air Force hopes to synchronize basic and technical training for all recruits.

In the past, the Air Force has operated its basic training on a nine week schedule. When recruits were placed on a five-day, instead of a six-day, training schedule, the period was jumped to 11 weeks.

Naval 'Strategic Air' Commands Much Notice At SecDef Wilson's Pentagon Conference

Defense Secretary Charles E. Wilson, who last week told the Senate Appropriations Committee that the Navy's 60,000 ton carriers "give us the ability to project our air power into certain areas where we might not otherwise be able to do so," was asked at his news conference on 15 May to elucidate on that remark and on the role of strategic naval airpower.

He was asked: "Are there certain areas where the Navy has a primary strategic mission?"

The Secretary replied: "Surely."

A newsman queried: "Primary strategic mission?" Another commented that "strategic bombing mission" is what was meant.

To this, Mr. Wilson said "Yes sir," but declined to give any details as to a possible modification of the Key West and Newport agreements, which assign the Air Force the primary mission for strategic bombing.

Here are some pertinent questions and answers from the news conference which touch on the matter of strategic naval airpower.

Q. Mr. Secretary, in your recent Senate testimony you said that Naval strategic air was capable of hitting targets that were otherwise not accessible.

A. What is that I said?

Q. I believe you said, sir, that Naval aviation was able to hit targets not otherwise accessible.

A. I don't recall any such statement.

Q. You said that the carriers gave us the capability to project our air force into certain areas where we might not otherwise be able to do so.

A. A carrier is a floating base if you want to look at it that way and there are some places we don't have overseas bases that perhaps we wish we did have or a situation might arise sometime in the future. That is what I was referring to.

Q. On the basis of that statement I was wondering if you planned to increase the Naval representation at General LeMay's headquarters. (Laughter)

A. Some of you have great imaginations.

Q. What places did you have in mind, Mr. Secretary?

A. Well, just get yourself a globe and pick out the spots where we have got bases overseas and where we don't know how far away some of those places might be away from the Continental United States and, you see, it might be pretty handy, if you have the problem, to have some military force a little closer.

Q. You are implying, sir, that some of our overseas bases which we now hold would be lost to us?

A. No, no, just some other places where we don't have any.

Q. Then you do then reaffirm your earlier statement that there are places in the world that strategic bombers or other bombers of our Air Force cannot reach at this time?

A. I don't think I quite want to say that. This refueling business gets into it and all that kind of thing.

Q. Well, that was the statement read to the Hill and—

A. We are interpreting it a little differently than I meant it, but just to take the specific thing and say that the Air Force, given the problem, couldn't stop a bomb anywhere in the world, I wouldn't quite like to challenge them on that one.

Q. Are there certain areas where the Navy has a primary strategic mission?

A. Surely.

Q. Primary strategic mission?

Q. Strategic bombing mission is what he meant.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Has that been assigned, sir, because around here we can't seem to get that clarified?

A. Why should you? (Laughter)

Q. I am not asking for a target—well, because you made the agreement and said it's the Air Force's primary mission and an auxiliary mission of the Navy's. Now this may be playing with words.

A. I think it is. Why don't you let the Chiefs fool around with the war plans? (Laughter)

Q. We are not interested in the war plans, but we are interested in the statement that's been made by you and by other administration officials that imply that we don't need as much Air Force strategic bomb power because we have Navy strategic power which to us sounds like a rather new concept and, therefore, it has not been explained as to what part the Navy plays.

Q. One of your Chiefs incidentally also before the same Committee did publicly play around with that same point.

A. That is right.

Q. That is, of course, you see, what we are leading to.

A. You want me to come down and quarrel with the boys.

Q. I don't say quarrel—elucidate.

A. I think we had better let it alone. Everybody knows the Navy has a strategic striking power and when you talk about how much, what kind of a percentage and how much the Air Force can count on them and so forth, but they have their missions and they have strategic power unquestionably or we wouldn't be justified in spending the money for the carriers like we do.

Q. If I understand the Key West Agreement, sir, it says the Air Force has the say about that, about what weapons they will have and how they will use them strategically.

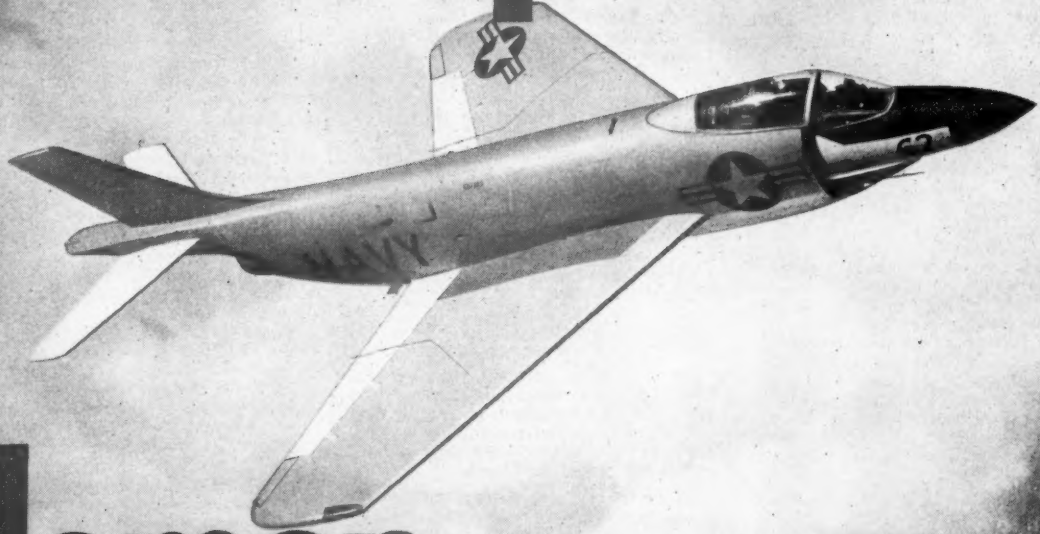

A. We are not having too much trouble over it until the outsiders stir us up, see.

Q. Mr. Secretary, don't these carrier bombers have a comparatively short radius for this mission?

A. On the average they are shorter than the land-based planes, that is true, but in joins the fleet

The F3H-2N Demon recently began its tour of duty as an operational fighter of the U.S. Navy following a Fleet Introduction Program described as "one of the most successful ever held at Patuxent."

Six of these versatile McDonnell fighters, powered by the Allison J71 engine, were put through an accelerated flight and maintenance program by Naval aviators and maintenance personnel brought in from various Fleet squadrons.

The program—successfully completed more than a full week ahead of schedule—involved over 600 hours of intensive test flying under simulated combat conditions. It included catapult launchings, simulated carrier landings, night instrument flying, night intercepts, night formation flying and a full range of tactical maneuvers typical of combat fleet operation at all altitudes from sea level to very high altitudes.

By successful completion of this exhaustive test program in record time, the F3H Demon and Allison J71 clearly demonstrated the qualities of reliability and dependability required of all new equipment before entering fleet service. Already established as the fastest all-weather Navy fighter now in service, the Allison-powered Demon thus becomes a valued and respected addition to the air arm of the U.S. Fleet.

Loss Of Skilled Manpower "Most Serious,"
Says Air Force Official, Urges Pay Increase

The most serious problem confronting the Air Force today is retention of skilled personnel, both airmen and officers, and it will take a new look at the pay scales to prevent continued heavy losses.

This was the statement of Assistant Air Force Secretary David S. Smith in an Armed Forces Day address delivered on 14 May at Travis AFB, Calif.

Said Mr. Smith:

"We are confronted with a world situation which may require us to maintain an effective deterrent strength for decades, or until the nations of the world work out a less perilous basis for peace. In this situation, we can continue to depend upon Armed Forces manned by volunteers moving in and out of uniform, or we can face up to the problem as a businessman would organize such an effort and provide for our Service personnel the financial rewards and necessary services which will encourage them to make the Armed Forces a career."

The Air Force's manpower chief emphasized that in addition to pay, a military man "is entitled to adequate housing, medical care for his dependents, recreational facilities and stores which will provide for his and his family's personal needs. . . . We cannot and should not expect patriotism and pride of Service to make up for the lack of these factors which affect a man's ability to provide reasonable comforts for his family and to earn a salary commensurate with his talents."

Air Force Academy Builds Test Rooms
To Determine Best Study Conditions

A research program—first of its kind in military history—is being conducted on the site of the U.S. Air Force Academy to help engineers, scientists, and military officials find an "indoor climate" in which cadets will learn most effectively.

The unique experiment was disclosed by Air Force Secretary Donald A. Quarles who recently reviewed the preliminary findings by engineers of the Air Force Academy construction agency and Minneapolis-Honeywell Regulator Company who are conducting the studies.

Two 13 x 18 ft. dormitory rooms have been built as exact duplicates of the quarters which will eventually house the academy's 2,600 cadets. The experimental rooms are the first structures erected on the 17,500-acre academy site, ten miles north of Colorado Springs.

The rooms are equipped with Minneapolis-Honeywell and Air Weather Service research instruments which read and record air temperatures at six points, chart the effects of the sun, air movement, humidity, and other conditions that affect human comfort and efficiency. The rooms are also furnished with automatic temperature controls so indoor conditions can be regulated and the effects of the changes recorded.

This data will be supplemented by reports from two Air Force second lieutenants. These "on-the-job trainees" are living in the completely furnished "laboratory rooms" and carrying out duties similar to those which Academy cadets will perform.

The project is under the supervision of Col. Albert E. Stoltz, USAF, director of the Air Force's Academy Construction Agency, which has the mission of constructing the modern service school.

Colonel Stoltz said, "It is recognized that human efficiency depends on human comfort. Because much of the student's academy learning will come from his after-class studies, it is essential that conditions in the dormitory rooms be coordinated and designed to provide the most efficient 'learning climate' possible."

Colonel Stoltz pointed out that the project will also make possible the testing of room arrangements, furnishings, lighting, sound, and equipment — even door knobs — before they are installed in the completed buildings.

MAJ. GEN. DELMAR T. SPIVEY, USAF, (left), commandant Air War College, Maxwell AFB, displays the college's new necktie to Brig. Gen. Sidney F. Giffin, USAF, vice commandant. Design is a small futuristic aerodynamic form, silver gray in color, polka-dotted diagonally at one-inch intervals across a background of medium blue. Officers and civilians who have attended the Air War College and staff and faculty members of comparable rank are eligible to purchase and wear the tie with civilian attire.

Puerto Rico's 198th Fighter Interceptor
Squadron Gets New Base at Isla Verde

Units of the Puerto Rico Air National Guard started moving to new quarters at the International Airport last week. Lt. Col. Alberto A. Nido, Commander of the 198th Fighter Interceptor Squadron (Jet), said the Squadron composed of 443 airmen and 33 officers held its 6 May drill period at the new base.

The new installation is located on a 25 acre site at the Southeast end of the International Airport on property leased by the National Guard Bureau under a 25 year lease with the PR Port Authority. The facilities consist of a $2 million hangar and repair shops with 200,000 square feet of concrete parking apron. The parking apron is about two-thirds completed and is scheduled to be finished in early June.

The new facilities include:

A two-story lean-to type hangar with shops and offices; motor service shop; paint-dope and oil shop; supply warehouse; fire crash station, and, a fueling system station.

The Puerto Rico Air National Guard received federal recognition as a unit in November 1947 when 160 airmen and 10 officers set up headquarters at the Isla Grande Airport. Seventy-five per cent of the personnel were World War II veterans. They were equipped by the National Guard Bureau with F-47 "Thunderbolt" aircraft and placed under the state headquarters of the Puerto Rico National Guard commanded by Maj. Gen. Luis Raul Esteves, Adjutant General. Lt. Col. Nido at that time a captain was put in command, and has commanded the unit ever since.

In 1954 the 198th, known throughout the Air Guard as the "Flying Buccaneers" of Puerto Rico, received T-33 jet trainer aircraft and began the transition from conventional engine operations to all-jet fighter operations. Since that time 11 F-86 Saberjets have been received. The F-86E is now the Squadron's operational combat type aircraft for fighter interceptor training, and five additional F-86 planes are to be delivered later this year. The Squadron now has 14 pilots assigned, and all of them are checked-out in jet aircraft, according to Capt. Henry E. King, operations officer.

The Puerto Rico Air National Guard is composed of the 198th Fighter Interceptor Squadron and two other supporting units, the 198th Weather Forecasting Flight with M. Sgt. Harold Monroe as Supervisor of training, and the 140th Aircraft Control and Warning Flight, commanded by Capt. Raymond Angueira. The 198th Fighter Interceptor Squadron is a fully augmented squadron operating under the Continental Air Command and the Fourteenth Air Force for training and administration respectively. Due to the distance from the mainland, the unit operates virtually as an independent wing rather than a separate squadron.

The Maintenance Squadron Element supervised by Maj. Henry L. James and the Supply Squadron Element under Capt. Raymond Brayfield are almost completely moved.

The Motor Vehicle Squadron Element supervised by Capt. Roberto Vargas, the Food Service Squadron Element under WO Enrique Vallecillo, and the Installations Squadron Element headed by WO Edward L. Gribus were completely moved by 6 May.

The Communications and Medical Squadron Elements, supervised by Capt. Enrique Ruiz and Capt. Ismael Vilar, respectively, completed their movement.

The Air Force assigns a Senior Air Advisor to the Air National Guard to supervise and assist in the training of the squadron. This position is currently being filled by Lt. Col. Erwin C. Ethell, USAF, formerly assigned to Headquarters Ninth Air Force at Shaw AFB, S. C.

THE NET

America's most potent protective weapon has been announced by the Army.

It is the new Martin Missile Master, the country's first electronic system designed to coordinate and control an integrated network of radar surveillance, target detection and anti-aircraft missile battery operation.

Now fully proved out and ready for installation, Missile Master offers pushbutton protection for whole cities and strategic areas.

The system collects information on the position, identity and flight data of all aircraft entering the network. This data is stored electronically and distributed to display consoles in the Operation Center and at the missile batteries.

Thus, the activity of Nike batteries and other advanced weapons in the system are centrally coordinated and controlled.

This important new weapon system is one of the great defense developments of our time.

"If our Armed Forces are to be manned with competent people, dedicated to the security of their country, we must make Military Life a Wanted Career."—ASSISTANT DEFENSE SECRETARY CARTER L. BURGESS.

Career Plans Roll. With the appointment this week of a special committee on technical pay and the appearance before the Senate Appropriations Committee of Assistant Defense Secretary Burgess to make a full report on and an appeal for support of the Department's career incentive plans, the Department's heavy "career" machinery appears to be now in high gear. A great many of its key legislative items are before Congress for action—some of them have been there since the first session and still await Senate action. (For details as to the status of each phase of the program discussed by Mr. Burgess, see articles on page 3 of this issue of THE JOURNAL).

For the "new look" at Service pay, Deputy Defense Secretary Robertson has asked that the new committee finish its studies and submit recommended legislative proposals prior to the opening of the new Congress next January.

The instructions to the new pay group are specific. They are to study the pay of "civilian and military managers" and make recommendations as to what increases are needed to hold men in these upper grades. At the same time they are to seek a method of giving enough pay to commissioned and enlisted "technicians" to induce them to stay in the Services without at the same time bringing about any "depreciation of the authority and responsibility inseparable from command."

The Committee has thus been given a very delicate and difficult task. Increases in upper grades of the uniformed services have been provided in past pay recommendations but have consistently been cut back by Congress. Will Congress now come around to providing this incentive at the top? Special pays for technicians, although vitally needed to retain these men in the Services, can become very involved and doubtless will be made the target of any category of personnel not so defined for pay purposes. As Secretary Burgess points out, a piecemeal approach already has been taken in the special pay increase for doctors, which he says was "dictated by demand and without orientation to our over-all manpower requirements."

The high caliber of the Committee, headed by Ralph J. Cordner, President of General Electric, and having on its membership such pay experts as Charles R. Hook, Chairman of the Board of Armco Steel, and former Assistant Secretary Dr. John A. Hannah, gets it off to a good start. The greatest problem will come when the report goes to Congress.

In his able presentation of the career problem to the Senate Committee, Mr. Burgess outlined the scope of the need, how the Department has grappled with it, and what yet needs to be done. Three areas of approach are being used, he pointed out. First, to improve the circumstances under which uniform personnel serve, that is their housing, tours of duty, medical care for their families, schooling for their children, etc. Second he listed the elimination of inequities which cause discontent. Reimbursement he cited as the third approach, and in that area he said he was not talking about money alone, but means to include the status in the community and standard of living. All of these, of course, need constant attention for as new changes are brought about other conditions can be altered or inequities created.

We believe Mr. Burgess' presentation impressed the men who hold the purse strings. We hope so, for without their support the Department's program can not get very far.

Improve Nurses-Specialists' Status. Backed by strong White House interest, the Department of Defense has at last gone to Congress with a comprehensive plan for the betterment of the status of nurses and specialists of the medical services of all the Armed Forces. (See story on page 2).

These important Service personnel suffer not only from the shortcomings common to all others in uniform, but have in addition, many problems which plague them alone. As pointed out in THE JOURNAL of 4 February, their flow of promotion is impeded by bottlenecks in each of the three Services. In some instances, for example, nurses are five years or more behind other officers in eligibility for advancement. Housing and career planning offer further stumbling blocks to the retention of such personnel.

Correction of this situation is needed not only in justice to these important groups, but also for the overall effect upon all Service personnel. The shortage of nurses (none of the Services is up to its quota) has, in turn, an adverse effect upon all military personnel and their families, for hospital care is thus made doubly difficult for both doctors and patients.

Defense Secretary Wilson has now laid the problem and its possible solution before Congress. The need and the justice is so apparent that we believe once hearings have been started and the Committees learn the full facts legislation will be forthcoming.

IN THE JOURNAL

10 Years Ago—The Secretaries of War and Navy were called to the White House this week and directed by President Truman to bring together their "points of agreement" on the proposed unification of the Armed Forces in a compromise plan acceptable to both major services.

50 Years Ago—Secretary of War Taft believes that officers of the transportation and supply departments of the Army may learn valuable lessons by watching the methods employed by the managers of the big Barnum and Bailey circus. He asked Mr. Starr, business manager for the circus, if there would be any objection to having two officers of the Army accompany the Barnum and Bailey circus for a week or two, watching the methods of transportation and subsistence employed by the big show.

90 Years Ago—The contract for erecting a monument to commemorate the battle of Gettysburg, to be erected on the field where the decisive conflict was waged, has been awarded to James G. Batterson, of Hartford, Conn., who designed the accepted plan. The monument is 23 feet square at the base and 55 feet in height. At the angles of the base are four buttresses, each supporting a colossal statue in a sitting position. These statues are allegorical, and represent respectively, War, History, Peace, and Plenty. The structure will cost about $60,000.

Seek Better Program For Schools and Teachers

Editor, THE JOURNAL:

On behalf of the teachers with the USAREUR schools, as well as the thousands of children of military personnel stationed in France and Germany whom we teach, I would like to thank you for the articles and editorials in your April 7, 14 and 21 issues. We are extremely grateful to you for the interest you and your paper took in our recent financial problem.

Naturally, we are extremely grateful to Secretary of the Army Brucker, and to all those persons who helped to realize the successful solution to our recent financial crisis. However, although the problem for this year has been solved, we have been given no assurance that a similar situation will not recur, nor have we been given any concrete indication that the professional security of the teachers will be improved.

We have been told that for the sake of economy the Army will cut personnel and supplies for the next school year and will curtail and in some cases eliminate certain academic programs such as language, art, music, speech, remedial reading, etc. As teachers, we do not feel that these proposed cuts and changes are educationally sound. We sincerely feel that the children of military personnel stationed in Europe deserve educational opportunities equal to or better than those available at Stateside schools.

We further feel that there should be one educational policy for the three service school systems and that this uniform educational policy should be determined by qualified civilian educators and not by the military. It would seem financially as well as educationally sound to have one headquarters and one educational policy for the three school systems in Europe.

As for the employment conditions of the teachers themselves: At the present time they vary from one service to another, although all teachers are hired as GS-7 Civil Service Excepted Appointments. As pointed out by our recent financial crisis, the teachers with the USAREUR schools receive the fewest benefits and have the most limited amount of professional security. We find it very difficult to understand and accept the continued loss of benefits and security when the Navy and Air Force teachers are not forced to lose these same benefits and this security.

In March, we presented recommendations to our civilian and military headquarters. Since that time we have formed our badly-needed teachers' association, of which I am chairman. We hope eventually to include teachers with all the service schools in Europe in our association. As to the other points, we understand that a House subcommittee was in Europe last fall to discuss the employment conditions of all teachers with service schools in Europe. Unfortunately, no teacher with the Army, Navy or Air Force schools was invited to meet with this committee. We are vitally interested in any action taken to improve our present situation, but we feel that no matter how deeply interested our administration may be in our problems, it is most difficult for management to fully understand the problems of employees. We feel that improvements can best be made when both management and employees concerned share suggestions and recommendations.

We realize that we are a relatively small group, but we believe that the educational opportunities for the thousands of dependents of military personnel assigned to duty in Europe are exceedingly important, and for that reason we believe an investigation of the entire school situation by the appropriate authorities is not only advisable, but necessary.

Once again, may I thank you for the interest in our problem taken by THE JOURNAL. We will be equally grateful for any action you may take on our behalf in the future.

$100-Million In Test Equipment Available At Army's Ordnance Guided Missile School

By COL. H. S. NEWHALL
ORD. CORPS, USA
Commandant

A STAGGERING dimension in modern warfare has developed since the late stages of World War II. The past several years have carried us closer to the concept of push-button warfare. Behind all of this is the Army Guided Missile Program. A major factor in the success of this program is the Ordnance Guided Missile School here at Redstone Arsenal.

Early in 1951, the Ordnance Corps began planning its operation for training personnel in this new field. At that time the personnel who had been actively working on the organization of guided missile training were members of the Ordnance School at Aberdeen Proving Ground, Md. In June, 1951, in order to centralize and accelerate this planning the Guided Missile Division of The Ordnance Training Command was established.

Started Operating in '52

The mission of this division was to plan and develop all phases of guided missile training activities for The Ordnance Corps, including the establishment of a school. During this phase of planning, the division made all the necessary preparations relative to programs of instruction, equipment purchases, personnel requirements, and other matters relative to the school and training programs in particular.

Final site selected for the school was Redstone Arsenal. The advance party arrived 1 Feb. 1952. By June the School had an operation strength of 40 officers, 140 enlisted men, and 48 civilian employees.

The first Ordnance guided missile training program began on 10 March with seven officers enrolled in the Guided Missile Officers Course and with three enlisted courses. The situation improved steadily during the latter half of 1952. Programs of instruction were constantly revised to keep abreast of changes in equipment. The first CORPORAL section was set up in January, 1953, and shortly after the first NIKE ground station was established.

Under Ordnance Training

In August 1953 the School was placed under the command of The Ordnance Training Command, Aberdeen, Md., with Redstone Arsenal responsible for administrative and logistical support and military discipline.

Initially, courses were taught in Guided Missile Repair, Internal Guidance System Repair, External Guidance System Repair, and Propellants and Explosives, in addition to the Guidance Components Repair course at the Signal School.

Courses are given at the present time for two missile systems; the NIKE (Antiaircraft Artillery missile) and the CORPORAL (Artillery missile). Two officer courses cover both of the systems, namely, the "Ordnance Guided Missile Maintenance and Supply Management Course," which is a two week orientation course, and the "Ordnance Guided Missile Operations Officer Course," a ten week course covering both systems from a supply and maintenance standpoint.

Teach Maintenance Supervisors

In addition to these officer courses, there are two officer and warrant officer courses of 36 weeks each, which train Guided Missile Maintenance Supervisors. Five enlisted courses are conducted on each system, each course covering a specific part of one missile system, and resulting in the award of a guided missile MOS. More detailed information concerning these courses may be obtained from The Army School Catalog.

All courses at the Ordnance Guided Missile School are organized to provide balanced instruction in classroom conferences and practical exercises. To accomplish this, several sets of NIKE and CORPORAL firing and handling equipment, and many missiles of each type are used. Test equipment is also available in the proper quantities in order to maintain the proper instructional standards. The value of the equipment currently on hand at the School is estimated to be more than $100,000,000.

When the school was first established, the only facilities available for use as classroom, laboratories, shops and offices were buildings which had been constructed during World War II as chemical loading lines and warehouses. A construction program was developed, however, and action initiated to provide suitable facilities for school operations. Since that time, one class and laboratory building, two shop buildings, an administration building, and a complete 1,000-man troop area have been constructed.

More Construction Planned

It is expected that, within the next fiscal year, three additional class and laboratory buildings and two additional shop buildings will be constructed, along with a technical library, hydraulic and electrical shop, training aids shop, and several maintenance buildings.

A visitor to the School today will find a thoroughly qualified instructor staff utilizing the talents of persons from many walks of life, adequate equipment, and a high state of morale.

Although the school only conducts courses on the NIKE and CORPORAL equipment at the present time, training in additional missile systems will begin as equipment and facilities become available.

Planning at the Ordnance Guided Missile School covers projected training programs for every guided missile known to be under development by the Army. The school stands ready to implement these programs in the accomplishment of its mission, to provide the proper trained personnel and units required for their operation, maintenance and support in the field.

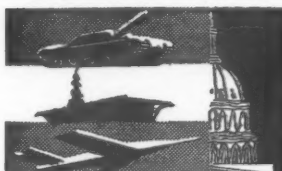

bers of the Armed Forces and their families, including a civilian hospitalization plan for those to whom military medical facilities are not available. Sent measure back to House.

Introduced in House

BOOST RETIRED PAY—HR 11180, Rep. Davis (D-Ga.), provides that certain retired officers of the Army who were advanced in rank at time of or after their retirement shall receive retired pay of rank to which advanced.

Col. Newhall

defense ON CAPITOL HILL

BACKING FOR SAC'S TECHNICIAN PAY BOOST PLAN came this week from Senator Leverett Saltonstall (R-Mass.). The ranking Senate Armed Services Committee Republican said he was "profoundly impressed" by General Curtis LeMay's statement that the principal problem in the Air Force is personnel. "General LeMay made it strikingly clear that unless trained personnel, fully adequate in numbers and experienced in their skilled jobs, were made available in increasing numbers to the Air Force, no increase in the number of aircraft themselves would be of particular value from the standpoint of our Nation's security," Senator Saltonstall said. He added that "The accent must, at this time, very clearly be upon men, not missiles; upon people, not planes."

A MILITARY PAY RAISE also is being championed by Representative Paul B. Dague (R-Pa.). Here is what he told the House. "The average serviceman occupies in the minds of too many of us the role of 'hero in war, zero in peace'; and while nothing is too great for the soldier or airman who mans our defense when we are under attack, our treatment of him in peacetime is both illogical and senseless. We spend millions on a modern plane and then expect the man who pilots it to work for less than an ordinary mechanic's wages, even though he has to be a technician of the highest type. But the thing we sacrifice so readily, that is above price, is the esprit de corps without which no military service ever amounted to a hill of beans. I say, with all the emphasis I can command, that the time is here when we must make military service so attractive economically that we will have no difficulty in recruiting and keeping on the job the cream of American manhood to protect us from those who would destroy us."

CONCENTRATION OF 95 PER CENT of Federal research funds in a few big firms hinders defense and undermines free enterprise, Representative Frank Thompson (D-N. J.) charges. He has introduced legislation authorizing an investigation of the Government's research and development programs. He said in the seven months ending on 31 Jan 1956, the Defense Department awarded R&D contracts amounting to $982 million. "Of this huge sum only five per cent went to firms having 500 employees or less," he declared. "In other words, the concentration of research contracts among the large companies is even greater than procurement contracts generally, and small business firms are for all practical purposes ignored."

IT'S EVEN ODDS that Russia may fire the ICBM before the U. S., Chairman George H. Mahon (D-Tex.) of the House Defense Appropriations Subcommittee believes. He told the House, "This missile has been referred to, and probably only to a slight degree inaccurately, as the ultimate weapon. My own personal opinion, for whatever it may be worth, and I do not think anybody knows for sure, is that there is a 50-50 chance that the Soviets may be able to fire the first intercontinental ballistic missile." Mr. Mahon said both countries are expected to be able to fly a test model of the ICBM within a few years, but "it will in all probability be five years or more before the ICBM could be fully perfected and production could begin for the use of our forces in the event of an all-out war." He added that the Soviets began "an intensive program for the development of the ICBM" immediately after WWII, and the U. S. did not. He said "We are trying now to make up for lost time, and whether we will be able to do it remains to be seen." He disclosed, however, that the United States has "made significant breakthroughs which make it clear that we can perfect the ICBM."

SECRETARY WILSON WAS CHIDED by House members for his statement that "fearmongers" are painting the U.S. Defense picture too black. House Majority Leader John W. McCormack (D-Mass.), said the Secretary's statement "is not the kind of language that I would want to hear from a man in such a highly responsible position." He said it reminded him of the pre-Pearl Harbor complacency in the U. S. Representative George H. Mahon (D-Tex.), said "It is too bad that the Secretary used the words. It is not the first time that the Secretary has been inept in the use of phrases."

TRANSFER OF CONAC HEADQUARTERS—proposed by Representative John Taber (R-NY)—has earned a "no soap" response from the Air Force. The New York Congressman wants the Air Force to switch the headquarters from Mitchel AFB to Sampson AFB, or all of the Mitchel units to Sampson. The latter installation is to be closed as a basic training center. The Air Force says it opposes the Taber proposal because it would be "thoroughly uneconomical to operate a major installation simply for the accommodation of a headquarters." Furthermore, it wouldn't be feasible to move the other Mitchel units to Sampson "because these units depend for the most part on their proximity to a large reserve population and this large reserve population does not exist in the area near Sampson," nor does Sampson have suitable flying facilities. Air Force Under Secretary James H. Douglas told the House Armed Services Committee, which is studying the proposal, that Mitchel is one of 98 permanent AF installations "and one of our best ones from the standpoint of permanent buildings and personnel facilities." He said the base is worth about $67 million. Capitol sources say there is slight chance that Congressman Taber will win his battle to keep Sampson open. Secretary Douglas says the Air Force doesn't need three basic training centers any more and, since Sampson is the most expensive to operate, it's the "least desirable" to keep.

FLYING HOURS will be increased under the new military budget. The hours that aircraft will be in the air during FY '57, counting each aircraft flying for one hour as a flying hour, will increase about seven percent over the current year, after allowing for a small decrease in the flying hour program for transport-type activities.

U. S. AIRPOWER now includes approximately 42,000 planes. Figures disclosed by Representative Richard B. Wigglesworth (R-Mass.), show that the Air Force has an active inventory, including the National Guard and Reserves, of 25,342 planes. The active inventory of the Navy and Marine Corps is 12,570, and the Army has between 4,000 and 5,000 aircraft which brings the total to 41,912 or 42,912. The operational figure is somewhat less, but it is "far in excess of any overall figure that has ever been presented" to the Appropriations group as representing the number of planes available to Russia, Congressman Wigglesworth said.

THE SCHOOL SITUATION in Europe may prompt a Congressional inquiry. Capitol Hill military experts are disturbed over reports that Army, Navy and Air Force children overseas are not being treated alike in the matter of classroom instruction. The lack of "unification" in schooling of Service youngsters is criticized in a letter (Page 10) from the chairman of a newly organized Army teachers association in Europe.

IMMEDIATELY UPON COMPLETION of Armed Forces Day celebrations, Army commanders will get busy with plans for commemorating the 181st birthday of their Service on 14 June. A new Army announcement notes that "Armed Forces Day . . . was not intended to stifle or stop activities within each Service designed to promote esprit de corps or pride in the traditions of the respective Services." THE 14 JUNE FETE will include messages, luncheons, birthday balls, speeches and internal publicity, but commanders were told to be careful to exercise "judgment and discretion." It was noted that failure to keep within limitations "could jeopardize plans to celebrate the Army Birthday in future years." THEME FOR THE CELEBRATION will be: "The U. S. Army—America's Most Versatile Fighting Force." About parades—the Army makes a simple statement: "No Army Birthday could be properly celebrated without a military parade."

PHILOSOPHICAL DEBATES, as well as fiscal factors, will come into play during consideration—first at the Pentagon, then at the Capitol—of new "selective" military pay raise and reenlistment bonus proposals. A strong point will be made, as was done by Asst. SecDef Burgess, that the time has come to break with tradition of equal pay for equal rank by providing different pay benefits for servicemen on the basis of skill levels and relationship to "supply and demand" considerations. A COUNTER-ARGUMENT will be made that this scheme does not take into consideration the peculiar problems of military service. Opponents of "selective" pay will point out, for example, that it would be impossible for a soldier ordered to Korea (without his family) to be trained as a Nike missile maintenance man and thereby qualify for higher pay, as would be possible for another soldier living comfortably in the United States with his family. Such instances will be cited by the scores. BUT TOP DEFENSE OFFICIALS, fully recognizing the problems that are created when there's a break with tradition, contend that unless remedial pay legislation is passed, there will be a critical shortage of skilled Servicemen, such as Nike maintenance men, while it will be easier to find other persons for duties requiring less training. STILL AND ALL, it will be most difficult, indeed, to draw the line between Servicemen who should receive higher pay and those who shouldn't when ranks are equal.

THE ARMY WANTS 100 SOLDIERS for Russian language training in 1957; 10 will receive training in Chinese at the Army Language School, Presidio of Monterey, Calif. Circular 611-10 tells details of the enlisted language training program.

THE DEFENSE DEPT. WILL CRACK DOWN harder on the Services in an effort to reduce transfers. Asst. SecDef Burgess said this week that "we still have too many and too rapid transfers of personnel but continued policing of this subject and hard-boiled administrative competence . . . can work on this problem." THERE'S LITTLE QUESTION that the Cordiner Pay Committee will make strong recommendations on this situation.

THE GREAT ESTEEM in which Service Nurses are held by the House and Senate Armed Services Committees is expected to result in accelerated Capitol consideration of new Administration legislation to eliminate promotion discrimination against nurses and medical specialists, such as therapists and dietitians. In an election year, the Committees are reluctant to take up legislation introduced so late in the session, but the nurses and medical specialists may be made an exception. Chairmen Vinson and Russell of the Armed Services Committees always have spoken highly of the devoted service of military nurses.

CHECKS AT THESE AGENCIES showed this week that the Departments of Treasury, Commerce and Health, Education and Welfare have not yet been cut in on preparations for the new military pay study. Why should they be? Their people will be affected, for the pay of uniformed members of the Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey and Public Health Service is based on military pay scales. THERE WILL BE QUICK ACTION to set the inter-Cabinet coordination problem at ease.

A PUBLIC RELATIONS MISSILE PROBLEM is creating a stir in industry, with increasing hot blast action at the Pentagon. Engine and electronic manufacturers are complaining that missiles in most cases carry the name of the manufacturer of the frame. They contend that this isn't fair and argue strongly that in missiles the frame manufacturer is relatively less important than in aircraft.

FEW WIVES CLUBS in the United States—for that matter, anywhere in the world—can claim a more pugnacious name than that held by an active group at Ft. Riley, Kans. They are the "Aggressor Wives." Their husbands serve with the Army's Aggressor Forces, used to simulate enemy troops in maneuvers. EARLY THIS MONTH, the ferocity of the Aggressor Wives was vented on a rugged assignment having to do with judging a Crazy Hat contest.

SPACE AVAILABLE TRAVEL on MSTs ships for retired military persons, formerly restricted to Regulars or Reservists retired for physical disability, is being opened up to non-Regulars retired under Title II of Public Law 810 and their dependents. Unaffected by the change are those retired under Title III.

FIFTY SOVIET SUBMARINES became "lost" in an Armed Forces Day address delivered by Army Sec'y. Wilber M. Brucker at Ogden, Utah, on 16 May. He said the Russians, in addition to 175 divisions (plus 80 in the European satellites) and 20,000 operational planes, have "about 350 submarines." Navy officials have said the Red Navy includes about 400 submarines.

THROUGH THE SCHOOL OF HARD KNOCKS WITH FLYING COLORS!

FAIRCHILD C-123 PASSES OPERATIONAL SUITABILITY TESTS

Now being subjected to rugged tests for the U. S. Air Force, the Fairchild C-123 Assault Transport has proved it can withstand the rigors of any combat airlift mission and win an "A" for top performance!

Shown above is an actual photograph of a C-123 making a short field landing downwind over a 50-foot obstacle on a sandy, deeply rutted strip at Eglin Air Force Base. During other tests the C-123 was flown in simulated front line combat airlift missions and proved its durability by landing and taking off on extra rough terrain in the shortest possible distance.

The Fairchild C-123 is literally built to "take it tough" on any assigned Air Force mission... another example of the rugged, hard-job dependability built into Fairchild utility and logistics aircraft.

USNA June Week

Radm. W. R. Smedberg, III, USN, Superintendent of the Naval Academy, has announced these June Week highlights commencing Saturday, 26 May.

The first June Week Brigade dress parade will launch festivities and honor Under Secretary Thomas S. Gates, jr., on Worden Field at 11, 26 May.

SATURDAY AFTERNOON will see Navy meet its honored rival, Army, in baseball, golf, and track at the Academy. That night the Class of 1957 will receive their rings at the colorful Ring Dance.

SUNDAY will see Military Mass and Catholic Baccalaureate Service at 7:30 a.m., and the general Baccalaureate Service in the Naval Academy Chapel at 10:30 a.m. Weather permitting, this day will find officers and midshipmen in White Service uniforms for the first time this year.

MONDAY will be highlighted by the 5:30 p.m. Brigade dress parade at which the Midshipmen will honor the Chief of Naval Operations, Admiral Arleigh A. Burke, USN, who will be the Reviewing Officer.

The Superintendent has invited Radm. Kenmore M. Orleans Thrift Shop Nets $500 a Month Profit—Wives Club Gives All to Charity

Orleans, France, (APO 58, NY)—Two hundred ladies in this area are helping to operate the thrift shop, serving Orin personnel and aiding Franco-American relations.

Founded back in 1954, at the Chevilly shopping center, eight miles from Orleans, the Thrift shop moved into one room prefab in the Coligny caserne late last year.

Every month the store makes between $500 and $600 profit. It all goes for charity. During recent months, the Officers Wives Club has donated money for Girl Scout calendars, contributed to the Chaplain's fund for local Orleans orphans and sponsored a party for Labor Service children.

Members of the Orleans Officers Wives Club take turns running the store, which is open two days a week. Mrs. Rudolph Barlow, wife of Col. Barlow, ACoS, G-1, vice president of the Club, is responsible for the activity.

Many others help stir the broth of the combination haberdashery-general store. Mrs. Clarence W. Carlson, wife of Lt. Col. Carlson, chief of the Labor Service Division, and Mrs. Oliver G. Kinney, wife of Col. Kinney, Com Z G-2, are the co-custodians. Mrs. Edwin L. Brinkman, wife of Col. Brinkman, Com Z Comptroller, is in charge of personnel.

From French bathinettes and antique furniture to comic books and cameras, nothing is too small or too large for the ladies to handle. One day, they laughingly recall they even sold a bottle of hair dye which had been in the shop only a half a day.

Experience with comic books had caused the salesladies to develop a special technique. Now they sell packs of 30 or 40 comics for a dollar. Since they began tying them in bundles sales have increased considerably. Before that time the stores youthful customers used to pass their time reading all the loose comics, but not buying any.

Carson, Colo., Thrift Shop are ready for business as they pose behind the new receiving window for incoming merchandise in the remodeled shop on Lake Ave. The volunteers, all members of the Officers' Wives Club, are (left to right) Mrs. M. She particularly commended members for aiding such charitable projects as "Lady of Perpetual Help" Cancer Home in Atlanta, the Surgical Bandage, Gray Ladies and Nurses' Aide Red Cross groups and the Post Youth Center.

mander Stone had been a contributing member of the Proceedings of the Naval Institute and of the Journal of the American Society of International Law.

He is survived by his widow, Mrs. Esther King Suydam Stone of Annapolis, daughter of Col. and Mrs. Charles Crooke Suydam; one daughter, Mrs. duVal Allen of Annapolis; and four sons, Col. Raymond Stone, jr., USA-Ret., of LaJolla, Calif., Col. Alexander G. Stone, USA, currently in Germany; Mr. Thomas H. Stone of 11 Murray Ave., Annapolis; and Mr. Gregory S. Stone, also of Annapolis.

Col. Will H. Lee, USFC-Ret.

Burial services were conducted at Arlington National Cemetery, on 17 May, for Col. Will H. Lee, USMC-Ret., who died at his home, on 13 May, at the age of 59.

Born at Yoakum, Tex., Colonel Lee enlisted in the Marine Corps in 1917, receiving his commission in 1923. During his earlier years in the Corps, he saw service in China, Germany, France and Nicaragua, in addition to Stateside assignments. In WW I, he received the Navy Cross for "extraordinary bravery" in France, when he carried a wounded Marine through heavy enemy fire to safety. During WW II, Colonel Lee served in Guam with the Quartermaster Corps.

He is survived by his widow, Mrs. Marjorie Jean Lee of 333 So. Glebe Rd., Arlington, Va.; one daughter, Barbara Jean Lee of Arlington; and his sister, Mrs. Maybelle Wagner of 3732 Veazey St., N.W., Washington.

Cdr. Jerome N. Lawlor, CEC, USNR

Funeral services were held at Tarrytown, N. Y., for Cdr. Jerome N. Lawlor, CEC, USNR, Assistant Public Works Officer of the U.S. Naval Shipyard, Portsmouth, N. H., who died of a heart attack, at the U.S. Naval Hospital, Portsmouth, on 7 May.

Commissioned as a lieutenant in the Civil Engineer Reserve Corps in 1942, Commander Lawlor had been on active duty ever since. In WW II, he had outstanding service with the Seabees in the Pacific, as Executive Officer of the 144th Naval Construction Battalion, and as Officer-in-Charge of Construction Battalion Maintenance Units 597, 510 and 121.

He is survived by his widow, two daughters and a son.

SIX THREE-STORY BARRACKS under construction on Custer Hill at Ft. Riley, Kans., will be completed 1 June at a cost of approximately $2,558,000. Plans call for approximately 1,800 ROTC cadets to occupy the buildings during their six weeks summer tour at Ft. Riley.

Regular Rank Bill

lineal position of those previously integrated insofar as future integration of inactive Reservists is concerned.

8—The desirability of placing numerical limitations upon the number of officers who may be integrated in the higher grades. (The Army plans to integrate officers in all grades through colonel; the Air Force, in grades through lieutenant colonel; and the Navy and Marine Corps will continue their present policy of integrating officers only through the grades of lieutenant and captain, respectively. As introduced, the legislation would permit the Army and Air Force to decide administratively how many officers they will integrate in each grade.)

The Pentagon revealed that the rate of Regular officer resignations has reduced considerably during the past 18 months, but Reserve officers are continuing to leave in excessive numbers. About three out of four return to civilian life when they complete their obligated tours.

On the other hand, the Army and Air Force are unable to give Regular commissions to the vast majority of those who apply. Because of present limitations, the Army is able to accept only one out of six applicants; the Air Force accepts one out of five.

Maj. Gen. Donald P. Booth, Army Assistant Deputy Chief of Staff, was prepared to tell the subcommittee that the Army is experiencing "serious shortages" in the "nine-to-eleven year service portion of the officer structure as well as in the fifteen-to-twenty-seven year service area."

The Army plans to integrate between 7,000 and 7,250 officers in grades through colonel during the first two years after the plan becomes law.

The Air Force will add 24,000 new Regulars in ranks through lieutenant colonel during the first twenty-four months.

Both Services will grant constructive credit.

The Navy and Marine Corps will continue to integrate officers only in the grade of lieutenant and below. The Navy will add 400-600 officers to its Regular ranks annually, and the Marine Corps will integrate as many as are needed to retain the present 50-50 ratio in that Service.

INDUSTRY IN DEFENSE

Industrial Executives Fly to Europe To Survey USAF Air Freight Terminals

Eighteen industrial executives, representing three Advisory Committees of the National Security Industrial Association, meet at Dover AFB, Dela. 14 May on the first leg of a two-week survey of major Air Force air freight terminals on the East Coast, in France and in Germany.

Special industry-military teams will study loading, unloading, ground handling, storage and packaging of freight lifted by the Air Force for the entire Department of Defense. Coordinated recommendations for improvements will be submitted to the Air Force through the Association following the survey.

Col. S. P. Triffy, USAF, Chief, Packaging and Materials Handling Division, Directorate of Transportation, Headquarters, USAF, arranged for the industry assistance and has coordinated all details of the program. He will accompany the group together with specialists in packaging, materials handling, and transportation from the Office of the Secretary of Defense and the military departments.

The civilian group consists of representatives from the NSIA Air Cargo, Packaging and Materials Handling Advisory Committees whose time and services have been made available to the Air Force by their companies.

The party proceeded from Dover AFB to McGuire AFB, N. J., and departed on 16 May for Wiesbaden, where it will be briefed by General William H. Tunner, USAF, Commander-in-Chief, USAFE. Two days will be devoted to facilities located at Wiesbaden-Frankfurt-Rhein am Main and the group will then proceed to Evreux, France, where it will observe the operations of the 322d Air Division. It is expected that the survey tour of European bases will end on 24 May at Chateauroux, France.

Role of Railroads In Emergency Cited

A booklet to assist the nation's railroad industry in developing an adequate and standard defense plan by outlining some of the principal aspects for which advanced planning is considered essential, has been published by the Association of American Railroads.

Entitled "Railroad Planning for Defense . . . a Guide," the 24-page booklet was prepared in cooperation with the Office of Defense Mobilization, the Transport Mobilization staff of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and the National Railroad Defense Planning Committee, which is composed of the industry's top operating officers.

Particular stress is placed on the factors and problems of railroad maintenance, operations and protection of equipment and facilities in event of an enemy attack.

Although, the booklet says, defense planning is primarily a responsibility of management, which in turn must have the full cooperation of government agencies responsible for defense, "adequate and satisfactory fulfillment of the railroads' responsibility to the country requires also a high degree of individual responsibility."

Within each railroad organization, the pamphlet continues, management is responsible for policy and plans with respect to the preparedness of the individual railroad to meet the demands of an emergency.

Managements of the railroads collectively are responsible for coordination and cooperation among and between railroads of the country, "as a whole and within each terminal or other important area," for group preparedness, including coordinated planning and mutual assistance in time of emergency.

The individual is responsible, the booklet states, for using his best efforts to carry out the purpose of defense planning.

Part one of the booklet covers advance planning to minimize damage from enemy attack, including protective measures, emergency organization and training such as first aid and hospitalization. Part two deals with defense against espionage and attack, and part three details plans for recovery after attack.

Comdr. George Eugene Pelletier, USNR, of Washington, D. C., veteran aviation writer and until recently on active duty in the Defense Department has been appointed Director of Public Relations for the Aerojet-General Corporation, with plants in Azusa and Sacramento, Calif.

Commander Pelletier, a native of Massachusetts, formerly was on the staff of The New York Times, the Springfield Republican and the Providence, R. I. Journal-Bulletin, and a writer for magazines in the aviation field. During his Naval service he served as Staff Public Information Officer, Naval Air Primary Training Command; Press Officer at Admiral Nimitz's headquarters during the war; Special Assistant to three Secretaries of the Navy; on the staff of the Supreme Allied Commander Europe and with the Office of Public Information, Department of Defense.

He will make his headquarters at the company's main office in Azusa, beginning 1 June. He assumes the duties formerly performed by William H. Taft, who is now devoting his principal efforts to the production of a series of public-service documentary films being produced for the Defense Department.

USN Orders More Cats For Deepfreeze Service

The Navy Task Force, under command of Radm. George J. Dufek, USN-Ret., which returned to this country in March after participation in Operation Deepfreeze I in the Antarctic, reports that the especially constructed Caterpillar equipment used on the project "performed extraordinary work . . . under extreme climatic conditions."

A second order for equipment for use in Operation Deepfreeze II next fall has been placed with the Caterpillar Tractor Co. Included in the new equipment will be 18 Caterpillar Electric Sets which provided the Task Force with electrical power.

The air base for Operation Deepfreeze in the Antarctic has been named for a Seabee tractor operator killed last January when he plunged down a crevasse. The post will be called the Williams Air Operations Facility in honor of Richard Williams, a 22-year-old construction driver third class from Appenheimer, N. Y.

Carrier Air Striking Power Termed Small

(The following statement was made by General Nathan F. Twining, USAF CofS before the Senate Appropriations Committee in response to a question posed during his testimony on 11 May.)

THE first priority task facing the United States in any general war is winning the air battle. I know of no military leader who disagrees with the importance of this job. The part of the air battle is vital to our survival is the destruction of the enemy's long-range air force and other intercontinental air weapons.

"Every day, in fact, every hour that the winning of this air battle is delayed would mean more nuclear bombs dropping on the United States—more lives lost, more property destroyed.

"In a war with the Soviet Union the air battle job would consist of two missions: first, defense against the Soviet air attack and, second, retaliatory attack upon the Soviet Union, especially the bases for its long-range aircraft.

"The problem of air defense will be assisted by some fighter aircraft from the Navy and Navy search aircraft are presently assigned, and will so continue, as part of the airborne early warning system that is an integral part of Air Defense Command. Aircraft carriers have an air defense capability, but it is designed for use in protecting the naval force itself, not for continental defense.

"Carrier aircraft also have an attack capability with nuclear weapons. The size of this total capability depends on the attack aircraft complement of the carriers (which must also carry defensive fighters, search planes, and the like.)

"The portion of the attack capability available to supplement Strategic Air Command, depends upon what priority naval tasks may exist at the time. The targets that can be attacked by such carrier-based planes as are available also depend upon the location of the carriers at the time in relation to the combat radius of their attack aircraft. The range of carrier aircraft is relatively short compared with their land-based counterparts.

"But we must be realistic about such factors as the probable location of the carriers, as well as the amount of striking power they could contribute (to the strategic air offensive) which is small.

"If more detailed comments are desired by the Committee, I would recommend they be given in executive session."

Admiral Burke Tells Carrier Capability

(Following is an excerpt from the testimony of Admiral Arleigh Burke, USN, Chief of Naval Operations, before the Senate Appropriations Committee. He tells here of the Navy's "powerful striking capability" and of how the core of that power is the aircraft carrier.)

THE Navy has a powerful striking capability today. Our ships can now carry powerful weapons in significant quantities.

"Our naval aircraft are the heart of our striking capability, as well as our defensive capability. We have been most fortunate during the past year in that several new models of aircraft have been started in production which will increase the Navy's striking capability appreciably. Such aircraft as the A3D, the A4D, the F8U and the P6N all will add greatly to the Navy's contribution to overall air power.

"OUR FLEETS are in position in critical areas today. They remain under the complete control of the United States under all circumstances. The Navy striking power built around the air power of our carriers and the air power in our anti-submarine warfare squadrons, both in carriers and from shore bases, is ready today for immediate use in any type of emergency.

"Naval Air Striking Power coordinated with the Air Force through the Joint Chiefs of Staff, and through unified commanders in the case of nuclear weapons, augments the striking power provided other cases the carriers can get closer to the targets than the land-based planes, from where the bases are, and also you can say in one way that it is difficult to make your plans because you don't know where the carriers are, but it is also an asset on your side that the enemy doesn't know where they are either. So it's a—

Q. Why doesn't the enemy know, Mr. Secretary?

A. Because they don't know where the carrier is going to steam the next day or next hour.

Q. They will know if it's close enough to them to do any damage, won't they?

A. They might or might not know.

Q. How could they possibly not know?

A. Well, you can go quite a distance in one night, you know. You can't move an air base very fast. (Laughter)

Q. Radar is not inhibited by night, is it, sir?

A. Well, there is no radar that could follow the carrier.

Q. No radar can follow the carrier?

A. At great distances.

Q. Mr. Wilson, when General Twining made the flat statement that the Navy's contribution to strategic striking power would be small, do you agree in your context that he is correct, in the context which you just explained?

A. I don't want to get into the argument over what you mean by small. A man is small as compared to an elephant; he is large as compared to a mouse. (Laughter)

Q. Do you have any idea on a percentage basis as to what the Navy's strategic striking power is in relation to the country's total striking power?

A. I don't think I would want to state any percentage off-hand.

Q. Mr. Wilson, when did you change or reinterpret the Key West Agreement so that the Navy now has strategic striking power and a strategic striking power mission?

A. I am not conscious of the fact that there was anything in the Key West Agreement that specifically said that the Navy was to have certain strategic striking power, nor am I conscious of any important change that has been made in the last few years about the matter.

Q. As recently as last week when I asked the Navy about what its assignments are in strategic bombing missions they said they had none, that traditionally the Navy's job is to control the seas and to protect itself against any attack that might come at them from land, but not the same thing as a strategic bombing mission.

A. Well, obviously the Navy must have more responsibility or missions than to just protect itself. If they didn't have any other purpose than that why in the world would you have it? (Laughter) You have got to be reasonable about the whole business.

Q. When did it get this new assignment?

A. It's no new assignment.

by the long-range shore-based air of our sister service, the Air Force.

"THE CORE OF OUR AIR STRIKING POWER is the attack aircraft carrier. Modern aircraft carriers are designed to use high performance aircraft which themselves are capable of carrying atomic weapons as well as other types of weapons. Our carrier task force are mobile air bases on the high seas. They can strike and re-strike the enemy repeatedly over an indefinite period of time. They are able to move their launching sites large distances in a day, and consequently, they can select their launching sites at will—launching sites which the enemy cannot know about in advance. These carrier task forces are elusive targets. They are hard to find. They have their own built-in defense always with them. In times of tension short of conflict, they are impressive envoys both to our friends and to our potential enemies. They assure our friends of the United States' capability to support them. They demonstrate to our possible enemies the power with which they may be faced if they should decide to attack.

"Although carrier air power is the core of our striking units, the Navy will soon have other powerful elements also. All of these elements are coordinated. Of major importance are the ship-launched ballistic missile, the nuclear-powered guided missile submarines and jet-powered seaplanes. These will add to the heavy striking capability inherent in Naval Air."

U. S. COAST GUARD

Secretary of The Treasury—George M. Humphrey
Commandant—Vice Adm. Alfred C. Richmond

PRESIDENT Eisenhower has nominated Capt. Joseph A. Kerrins, USCG, for permanent two-star rank.

Captain Kerrins, who began his career in 1927, has been a permanent four-stripe officer since 20 March 1945. He is currently serving as Chief of Staff of the 12th Coast Guard District, San Francisco, Calif.

He is slated to assume duties as Commander, Eighth Coast Guard District, New Orleans, La., in August.

TAD Pay Rule

Headquarters has reiterated the rule governing entitlement to sea duty pay when Coastguardsmen are assigned to temporary shore duty.

Normally, it is expected that a member of the Service in receipt of sea duty pay will be continually performing duty aboard ship. However, in order to provide for short occasional absence from a ship for TAD, a 15-day period has been established as the maximum time during which sea duty pay may be continued.

A Coastguardsman who has returned from one period of TAD cannot, Headquarters points out, be assigned to the same TAD within 15 days and continue to draw sea duty pay for the second period.

This 15-day limitation is expressly established for the purpose of avoiding checkages of sea duty pay for every short shore assignment during a man's tour of sea duty.

Headquarters invites attention to paragraph 2B01045 of the Coast Guard Comptroller Manual.

New Pentagon Bill Seeks Fair Deal For Nurses And Specialists

the Army Medical Specialist Corps, Regular Army. The permanent grade structure for Air Force nurses and medical specialists has been established under section 307(d) of the Air Force Organization Act of 1951 and includes the permanent grades of colonel and lieutenant colonel.

b. It authorizes original appointments in the permanent grade of captain of nurses and medical specialists in the Regular Army and the Regular Air Force. This will permit the integration into the Regular components, in a grade commensurate with their experience, of Reserve nurses and Reserve medical specialists who have performed at least seven years of active commissioned service. This authority for original appointments at captain grade would be in addition to existing authority for original appointments at second or first lieutenant grade.

c. It would adopt generally for nurses and medical specialists of the Regular Army and Regular Air Force, provisions similar to those of the Officer Personnel Act of 1947 relating to promotion and retirement of Regular Army and Regular Air Force officers. Included are provisions for—

(1) promotion to the permanent grades of first lieutenant, captain and major on the same general basis as for other Regular officers of these services.

(2) promotion to the permanent grades of lieutenant colonel and colonel to fill vacancies in those grades.

(3) If in the permanent grade of major, retirement on completion of 25 years of service creditable for promotion, with discretionary retention to 28 years of service.

(4) If in the permanent grade of lieutenant colonel, retirement on completion of 28 years of service creditable for promotion with discretionary retention to 30 years of service.

(5) If in the permanent grade of colonel, retirement on completion of 30 years of service creditable for promotion or five years service in this permanent grade, whichever is later.

(6) retirement at age 60 if not earlier retired or separated.

d. It will permit counting for mandatory retirement purposes whatever years of service are counted for promotion purposes. Thus, the service with which a nurse or medical specialist is credited for promotion purposes upon her appointment plus her subsequent service on the active list will count for mandatory retirement purposes. Under existing law, there is no mandatory retirement of nurses and medical specialists of the Regular Army or Regular Air Force, except upon attainment of age 60.

Navy

For the Navy, Title II of the proposed legislation would amend the Officer Personnel Act of 1947 and the Army-Navy Nurses Act of 1947, to provide the following for officers of the Nurse Corps of the Navy:

a. authorize the rank of captain;

b. establish a limitation on the number of officers who may serve in the grade of captain of 0.2 per cent of the number of officers of the Corps on active duty; increase the limitation on the number of officers who may serve in the grade of commander from 1.75 per cent to 5.0 per cent of the number of officers in the Corps on active duty; and eliminate the limitation on the number of officers who may serve in the grade of lieutenant commander;

c. permit the selection for promotion to the grade of lieutenant commander of all qualified lieutenants in the promotion zone for the first time and, for one year after the proposal is enacted, those qualified lieutenants who have not been selected in previous years because of the limitation on the number of officers who could serve in the grade of lieutenant commander;

d. permit officers of the Nurse Corps to be members of selection boards recommending officers of that Corps for promotion;

e. provide for the retirement of captains under the same conditions as commanders and lieutenant commanders of the Navy Nurse Corps may now be retired in the discretion of the Secretary, that is, on reaching 55 years of age or completion of 20 years of active service, whichever is the later.

The Department of Defense believes that this legislation is essential if the military services are to attract professionally qualified women in sufficient numbers to meet the Regular component requirements. In this connection it may be noted that since January 1, 1952 the strength of the Army Nurse Corps has declined by almost 250 and the Navy Nurse Corps in the same period has lost almost 500 nurses. The strength of Regular nurses on active duty in the Air Force has remained practically static. At present slightly over 30% of the nurses and medical specialists on active duty with the Army are members of the Regular component. In the Navy 50% of the nurses are members of the Regular Navy. In the Air Force, Regular nurses and medical specialists comprise only 16% and 18% respectively of the total officers of their category on active duty. This situation exists despite constant efforts to procure nurses and medical specialists for the Regular Services from Reserve Officers and from qualified civilians.

Cost and Budget Date

If enacted it is estimated this legislative proposal would cost the services for a five year period the following maximum amounts:

Fiscal Year 1957	$ 785,660
Fiscal Year 1958	768,835
Fiscal Year 1959	1,017,550
Fiscal Year 1960	1,371,130
Fiscal Year 1961	1,626,275

LOWBOWL SCRAPER

(four wheel, crawler drawn)

25 cu. yd. heaped 18 cu. yd. struck

11 Reasons Why the No. 463 Delivers Bigger Loads at Lower Costs per Yard!

1. Lowbowl design, a new concept developed by and exclusive with Caterpillar, loads more material with less resistance clear to the end of the loading cycle.
2. Large capacity without using sideboards—25 cu. yd. heaped.
3. Easy, fast loading of full, heaping loads.
4. Large apron opening for speedy, easy ejection of sticky material.
5. Positive 'dozer-type' ejection that sweeps the bowl clean and allows fast, thorough, controlled dumping.
6. Flat bottom for smooth, level cuts—excellent on any finishing job.
7. Good digging action with stinger bit.
8. Wheels track within cutting edge for level cuts.
9. Adjustable rear axle height that allows bowl leveling with unevenly worn rear tires.
10. Rugged construction with high-strength steels for long life, low maintenance costs.
11. New tubeless tires for greatly reduced tire maintenance costs.

For bigger production at lower cost on shorter hauls, here's a new CAT* earthmover—the No. 463, featuring Lowbowl design. From stinger bit to ejector, this new scraper is engineered to load, haul and dump with maximum efficiency.
